Relay for Life raises staggering $108,000

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

A thousand stories were told around the track of the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School on Friday night, and each one raised $1,000 to try to prevent any more of them from having unhappy endings.

There was the story of seven-year-old Dawson Hamilton of Minden, a young warrior who painted "I am brave" on his face so people could read of his determination to fight the leukemia that's invaded his body.

Then there was the story of Kathy McKelvey-Brown who used the thought of her four-year-old son being without a mother to keep her going when her treatments against breast cancer were interrupted by the news that she also had lung cancer.

But the story of Sue Currie had to be told by her husband

Is centre's parking lot sponsorship a dig at council?

Parking at the Haliburton medical centre may soon be free of charge, but only for a few days at a time, and at the expense of local businesses looking for publicity.

Last Tuesday, Dysart council debated whether to approve a local business's request to fund free parking at the facility for one weekend. Some councillors felt the publicity stunt was actually a dig at council, who imposed the unpopular parking fees. This led to some discussion over whether the municipality should even entertain the idea.

"I think they're probably just doing this because they oppose the parking fee," said Reeve Murray Fearrey. "But if council wants to approve it, that's your decision to make."

Councillor Dan Kay disagreed with Fearrey, and said the municipality should set a fee of $300 per day, which would be put back into maintenance fees for the parking lot.

"Why don't we just set a daily fee, and if someone wants to do it, well then go ahead and do it," said Kay. "I don't feel it's making us look bad, I just look at it the same way as donating ice time."

Councillor Andrea Roberts said she agreed with Fearrey

Inspired by the glow of 1,000 luminaries, the 495 participants in Friday night's first-ever Relay for Life took turns in circling the track at the Haliburton high school. When the organizing committee first met in January, they were told that a realistic goal would be $25,000.

State your opinions – nicely – in Highlands East

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

Highlands East council will soon be on the move, in search of public input from across the municipality.

Last week, Reeve Dave Burton asked council to arrange public meetings in all four wards – what he calls a 'travelling road show' – so that residents and cottagers can give feedback and suggestions to their elected officials.

"I won't call them council meetings, because we won't be going into a session. It will be more like a town hall meeting," he said.

Burton suggested that the meetings be held on Saturday mornings throughout July and August in order to attract as many people as possible. He asked that all councillors be present for the meetings, and also suggested that councillors chair the meeting in their individual wards.

Burton noted that there will likely be some criticism at the meetings but is hopeful that ratepayers keep things constructive.

"I don't want it to be a bashing contest. I want it to be positive, and I would like the chair to keep it that way," he said.

"I'm sure when we get to Ward 3 there will be a few issues that will come up, but I don't want to dwell on one issue in particular, I'd like to cover the whole thing...There's a lot of people out there who have some really good input," he added.

Ward 3 Councillor Donna Graham suggested that council members should be given a chance to speak one-on-one with concerned residents before the meetings officially begin. "That might cool some people off," Graham said.

"Well, I don't think it will be too heated," said Burton in response. "I actually think it will be quite positive."

Highlands East looks to beef up bylaw enforcement

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

Highlands East is looking for a second bylaw officer after concerns were raised during last week's council meeting over how well current regulations are being enforced.

As it stands now, Chief Building Official Marie Schutt is the only municipal employee with the power to enforce bylaws. Council has come to realize that since she is "run off her feet" with other responsibilities, the municipality has struggled to enforce its own bylaws – particularly on weekends, which Schutt is supposed to have off.

Earlier this month, a number of councillors received phone calls from a ratepayer complaining of two dogs running loose on her property. Though Schutt reportedly visited the scene upon the initial complaint, the dogs broke loose a second time over the weekend when no one was available to solve the problem.

For that reason, council has decided to seek out a contract employee to enforce municipal bylaws part-time over the weekends.

"What we need is someone who can lay a ticket and make it stick. Otherwise it's just a joke," said Deputy Reeve Jim Mackie. "Why don't we see if we can find a retired cop or something, even on just on a part-time basis."

Councillor Suzanne Partridge immediately agreed with Mackie, as did CAO Sharon Stoughton-Craig.

"I think it would be very beneficial for the municipality if we did get somebody with law enforcement," said Partridge.

"You do need someone who knows the system," added Stoughton-Craig. "It's really hard for the average Joe who had never done this to write a ticket and have it processed through the courts."

Mackie said a retired police officer would also be ideal since he or she would be equipped to handle high-risk situations.

"I think it would be good to have someone with self-defence training...[Bylaw enforcement] can sometimes be a confrontational job, and you never know when you might walk in on an illicit agricultural endeavor," he said.

With a second officer on staff, the municipality would be better equipped to enforce bylaws such as the clean-and-clear bylaw, noise bylaws, dumping bylaws, and canine bylaws, said Stoughton-Craig. Mackie also suggested the municipality take things a step further, and have the new officer roam the municipality in search of bylaw infractions and undocumented structures.

"We should have someone drive down every laneway on all of our roads, because it's amazing some of the things that you find," he said. "It makes you wonder how many tax dollars we are missing out on. If we don't have people paying taxes on some of these buildings and structures, then that's not fair to the rest of the taxpayers."

Better late than never

Six months into 2007, Haliburton greets its New Year's Baby

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

It starts off almost like a stand-up comedy routine:

"You know you live in a small town when you celebrate a New Year's baby in mid-June..."

But as funny as it may sound to some, on June 15 at 3:50 a.m. — 166 days into the calendar year — the Haliburton hospital finally welcomed its first baby of 2007, Auren James von Zuben.

Last Friday, as parents Kira, 24, and Andrew, 32, sat in a hospital room admiring their newborn son, one of the last things they expected was to be paid a visit by a reporter from the local newspaper.

"We knew they didn't have babies here very often, but we weren't expecting this...to have the New Year's baby in June," said Andrew.

Dr. Norm Bottum, the only physician in Haliburton who does obstetrics, says the New Year's baby was originally supposed to be born in March "but I was on holidays so [the mother] went to Peterborough to deliver." Dr. Bottum says a second woman was scheduled to deliver in May, but she moved to Nova Scotia two weeks before she was due, making the von Zuben baby the first of the year.

Dr. Bottum says his last delivery before this one was in December. Usually the Haliburton hospital averages one or two births a month, but sometimes there can be months between births. He says this year was a particularly late arrival for the New Year's baby, but notes that there are a couple more babies due this summer.

"Next year, hopefully it will be sooner than June."

The von Zubens, who live on a quiet bush lot on Salmon Lake Road (just south of Gooderham), are still in state of shock from the whole experience. Sitting in a corner by the window, a glint of sunshine catches mom's weary, proud eyes as she takes another look at her first-born child.

"It's...overwhelming," she says, when asked how it feels to be a parent. "I don't even know how to feel."

Andrew, meanwhile, is not at a loss for words. His only struggle is trying to stop smiling long enough to answer the reporter's question.

"It's incredible. It was hard to even imagine what it would be like, but it's incredible," he says.

Kira's due date was actually June 9, but when the baby showed no signs of wanting to arrive on time, Dr. Bottum scheduled an appointment to induce labour at 5:30 p.m. on Thursday. Baby Auren James was born nearly ten and a half hours later, weighing a healthy eight pounds and eight ounces.

"It was a hard labour...lots of screaming," says Andrew.

"Actually, that was just Andrew," laughs his mother, Linda, who flew in from British Columbia 10 days earlier to meet her first grandchild.

"We were waiting and waiting and waiting for something to happen," recalls Andrew. "By the end of May the doctor was saying 'any time.' So there have been weeks of living on edge, thinking 'any time now.'"

Andrew says the couple decided not to know the baby's sex beforehand, since it might have taken away from the wonder and excitement of the whole experience.

"You don't get a lot of nice surprises in life like that, so it's best to keep it that way."

Nevertheless, Kira does note that there were quite a few amateur midwives who had predicted that a son was on the way.

"Everyone was leaning towards a boy. There were a few ladies who figured they could tell by the way I was carrying it. 'Oh, that's definitely a boy,'" she says with a laugh.

With their son both happy and healthy, the von Zubens were told they could most likely take Auren home as soon as Saturday, opening a new chapter for the young family.

But before leaving for Salmon Lake, Andrew says he will make a point to thank both Dr. Bottum and RN Dayle Smith one more time for staying by the couple's side until the early hours of the morning, ensuring Auren a healthy and safe delivery into this world.

"We were very fortunate to have been able to have our baby here. The staff have been excellent," he says. "Very capable, very confident, and very nice."

GREG HOEKSTRA/Echo

Kira and Andrew von Zuben were glowing with joy last Friday, less than 24 hours after Kira gave birth to their first child, Auren James von Zuben. Despite being born in mid-June, Auren is the first baby to be born at the Haliburton hospital in 2007, making him our New Year's baby.

MISSION ACCOMPLISHED

Haliburton Highlands Health Services Foundation celebrates a $6 million job well done

MATT JAMES

Staff Reporter

Congratulations Haliburton County, you did it – you helped raise $6 million over the span of eight years, retiring the capital debt for the new healthcare facilities in Haliburton and Minden.

At 2 p.m. on June 16, the parking lot of the Haliburton Highlands Health Services was transformed into a place of celebration as the HHHS Foundation began their thanks, six million times over.

The two facilities cost just under $20 million to build, renovate, and equip. As part of the package deal with the provincial and federal governments to make these facilities possible, Haliburton County had to raise its share, $5.7 million.

So what does this number really represent?

"It means people took great ownership and that we needed the facilities," said the Foundation's executive director Dale Walker prior to ceremony.

And the funds came from many areas: successful fundraisers such as the Special Gift Program, annual mail outs, the Christmas campaign, donors, and the always popular (and fast-approaching) Rotary Golf Classic.

To raise such a sizable amount of money, sizable numbers of people are needed, and when that money is raised, sizeable numbers of people need to be thanked including campaign chair Don Popple, board members both past and present, the Haliburton and Minden Hospital Auxiliaries, businesses and corporations of all sizes, the different levels of government, community organizations, and service clubs, such as Rotary and Lions.

But there's more. There's also Walker, her team of volunteers and of course residents, individuals, and cottagers. <None> In numerous speeches throughout the afternoon, former Haliburton MPP Chris Hodgson was recognized.

"Without the support of Chris Hodgson we may not be here today," said Hugh Nichol, the past chair of the Haliburton Highlands Health Services Corporation, during his brief review of the facilities' history.

In response Hodgson was modest about the support he provided.

"It's nice to hear nice things being said about oneself," said Hodgson, "but the truth of the matter is that's the reason why you elected me."

Local MP Barry Devolin praised Hodgson's leadership and for his consistent reminders to the government about promises made to Haliburton. Today the HHHS is viewed and known through government eyes as the Haliburton model.

"No one thought we could ever raise $6 million," said Popple. "But after about 10 phone calls we had a quarter of a million dollars."

This was able to happen because the people and businesses of the community never turn down the HHHS's requests for help.

MATT JAMES/ECHO

Former Haliburton MPP Chris Hodgson, who was joined by his wife Marie, played a major role in getting the provincial government to keep its promises.

A new campaign was also launched that day. Reach For The Future is a three-year, $2.5 million campaign raising money for new technology and medical equipment to improve care to the patients and residents.

The priority items on the hospitals list are Picture Archiving Communication Systems, also known as PACS, which enhances the digital imaging department and in turn receiving faster access to diagnosis and improved access to patient information.

Some beds in the hospital are 20 years and older and no longer meet ministry requirements. New beds will also relieve pressure, prevent skin breakdown, and increase the comfort and independence of residents. Stationary ceiling lifts and bathtubs are also part of the Reach For The Future campaign.

Dale Walker, executive director for the Haliburton Highlands Health Services Foundation, addresses guests at Saturday's celebration. Haliburton County has officially retired $6 million capital debt for the Haliburton and Minden healthcare facilities.

Haliburton's caboose may soon vamoose

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

Has Haliburton's caboose reached the end of the line?

Last week Dysart councillors debated whether to salvage the landmark railroad car (which currently sits unused in Head Lake Park) after receiving a letter from Tom Ballantine, director of the Haliburton Museum.

In the letter, Ballantine noted that a gentleman named George Kadoke has proposed a "minor relocation of the caboose" and "its outfitting as a satellite operation of the museum."

Ballantine says Kadoke originally approached Haliburton's Rotary Club with the proposal, but the club was uninterested at this time in funding the project. With that in mind, Kadoke asked that Ballantine next contact Dysart council to further examine the "potential and feasibility" of the relocation proposal.

During last week's meeting several councillors suggested that it may be time for Haliburton to get rid of the caboose.

"I mean, do we really need a caboose? I'll tell you what, I know where we can get a few old cattle cars, should we bring those up too," quipped Councillor Derek Knowles.

Deputy Reeve Bill Davis seemed to agree with Knowles, but warned that such sentiments could result in backlash from the community.

"There's a lot of public response. I was criticized before because I believed it had gone beyond repair," said Davis.

"Well, we have to be careful how we react to public response," said Knowles. "I think we're elected to make some tough decisions, and maybe getting rid of the caboose is the way to go... Nobody wants to get rid of it, but nobody wants it in their backyard."

Reeve Murray Fearrey asked Knowles if there were any estimates regarding how much it would cost to fix up the caboose. Knowles said estimates can run anywhere from $27,000 to $80,000, and noted that it cost the Rotary Club $15,000 just to paint the engine by the high school a few years ago.

"It's not wood, so it's not rotting, but these things still need to be maintained," said Knowles.

Davis also noted that if the caboose were to be used as an extension of the museum, the municipality would also have to consider the fact that it is not currently wheelchair-accessible.

"You'd have to have a ramp running out 150 feet just to get in there," he said.

Davis suggested that the caboose be moved out of the park and placed next to the engine, but Councillor Dan Kay pointed out that it would then be more vulnerable to vandalism, again leading to more maintenance costs.

As the discussion wound down, council agreed to let Ballantine and Kadoke further explore the concept's feasibility, since a solution needs to be found sooner rather than later.

"Something has to be done with it," said Fearrey. "It's like we're going backwards the longer that it sits there."

Municipal lots not for camping, says Deputy Reeve

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

Haliburton County has a number of breath-taking places for visitors to camp, but as far as Dysart's Deputy-reeve Bill Davis is concerned, the Head Lake parking lot is simply not one of them.

Last week, Davis told council he was extremely upset to have learned that the driver of a 56-foot tractor trailer spent three days living out of his truck while it was left parked - and running - in the Head Lake lot.

"The bottom line is, we should not allow parking in a municipal lot for three days," said Davis. "If a truck driver is coming through and he wants to have a sleep, I don't have a problem with that. I'd rather he slept than keep on driving. In fact, I don't think anyone would mind if it were overnight, but this was a three-day camping expedition in our parking lot."

Davis said he first learned of the incident after speaking to a local resident. He noted that the same resident had contacted the OPP but when officers arrived the driver had abandoned camp and headed in to town.

Because the truck was refrigerated, the driver left it running continuously for three days, presumably so that the trailer's contents did not spoil. Davis suggested that council put up some kind of signage in the lot, in order to prevent such an incident from reoccurring.

"I don't know what you'd put on the sign, but the bottom line is that you shouldn't have anyone camping out for three days. I'm just afraid that if we don't have some kind of sign it's liable to happen again," he said.

"If that had happened in the summer-time you'd also have a big problem down there, because he took up 12 spaces."

Councillor Janis Parker agreed with Davis that something should be done, and suggested that the municipality consider a bylaw.

"What happens if people start showing up for the Trash and Treasures weekend and there's a truck there running but we can't find the driver. What would we do," she asked council.

Clerk Tammy McKelvey told Parker and Davis that they were treading in a "grey area" since it would be hard to define exactly when, where, and how long it was acceptable to park in municipal lots. McKelvey also said that there may already be an applicable bylaw, and suggested that council wait to talk with bylaw enforcement officer Gary Heads before making any decisions.

In the meantime, Reeve Murray Fearrey suggested that the municipality send a letter to the offending company letting them know that such activity is unacceptable. However, Fearrey remained apprehensive about passing a bylaw or erecting signage, particularly since this is the first time in three decades that he has seen such an issue before council.

"This is the first time in 30 years that I've heard of this kind of an incident, so it's pretty safe to say it's an isolated one," he said. "I think having our bylaw guy go down and talk to [the driver] would probably be the simplest solution."

Community for life

THE THOUGHT of spending an entire night taking turns walking around a track probably dissuaded a few people from taking part in Relay for Life. But the 500 people who accepted the challenge were delightfully surprised by how easy it was to pull off their first "all-nighter" since their teenaged years.

It was the walking that helped. Just as your energy was waning, or the cool dampness of a summer night was seeping into your bones, you'd get up from your makeshift campsite in the middle of the field next to the high school and start making your rounds. Joined by dozens of other people, most companionably separated into pairs, you walked off any tiredness you may be feeling. The walking gave you back your energy.

And the luminaries that lined the track gave you purpose. One thousand candles glowed from inside their paper bags, the light soft and warm. Printed on one side of the bag was someone's name, accompanied by the words "In memory of" or "In honour of."

There were far too many names, far too many reminders of how invasive cancer has become in our lives.

It is this constant push and pull between life and death that has made Relay for Life an increasingly popular community event. On one hand, the night was fun. It was as if everyone decided to camp out after Midnight Madness, far away from the lights of main street. Some people played cards, some people took part in the activities planned by organizers but most people simply talked with one another. The atmosphere was friendly and relaxed, the sense of community strong.

Yet as people walked around the track, they looked down to read the names on the luminaries. There were so many reminders of people who have died – and how they died. You'd remember them, talk about them, mourn them. You'd also be glad when you came across the name of someone who had had the disease but survived.

More than 80 survivors were there that night for the initial "victory lap." Their very presence brought tears to the eyes. They had endured much. They deserved the look of pride on their faces as they were cheered on by their fellow participants. It was such an emotionally-charged beginning to an evening that had brought an entire county – and sometimes it seemed as if the entire county was there – together.

After all, it is these connections between people which give us our sense of community. We may only meet each other in the grocery store or we could belong to the same club and group. We could be family, we could be strangers; it didn't matter on Friday night. For 12 hours people were walking in solidarity for one another.

There cannot be enough words of praise for all the volunteers who made this happen, especially the people on the organizing committee. They've been meeting since January to plan the event and make sure it ran as smoothly as it did. Whenever they had a need for something, there was someone who said yes. (Everyone is avoiding making a list of someone who helped for fear of leaving someone out or making it seem as if some contributions were more valued than others.) From beginning to end there were people in place to take care of any situation that arose. Very few needs were left unmet (the need for more hand sanitizers for the porta-potties has already been added to next year's list) and there was no chaos as 600 people gathered to spend the night together. What a night it was.

Peek-A-Boo.

Say cheese

LAST WEEKEND I spent a day with a friend fly fishing at Algonquin Park. You might have seen me in a host of recent photographs.

If you haven't, it sure comes as a surprise to me since about 60 groups of tourists stopped to take pictures of me standing in the middle of the river casting a fly line.

While it's not exactly what I had in mind, I have come to accept this as part of my Algonquin Park experience. Almost every hiker carries a camera. At first they're expecting to see moose, wildflowers, or deer. Instead, they end up settling for images of the wild fly angler in his natural environment.

Typically, there's an amateur naturalist with every group. And he or she deems it necessary to provide commentary. First, they'll leaf through the field guides and come up empty handed. Then, they'll improvise, by saying things that sound very astute, given the environment.

"It looks like he wintered well," one of them might suggest as the group studies you with binoculars. "That one there is an old bull, just past his prime."

"Look at how patchy the hair on that one is," the other points out. "I think the ticks have gotten to him. That might explain his spastic casting rhythm too."

Every now and then, one of the bolder photographers will hop-scotch across the rocks to get an extreme close up. Others will try whistling to get your attention. Once, someone even tried to feed me an apple.

The truly sad part is that over the last ten years or so I have been photographed hundreds of times by amateur photographers trying to recapture an Algonquin experience. And not once has anyone ever caught me in the act of actually catching a fish.

My fly fishing friends have all had similar experiences. But somehow I seem to attract more photographers than most. I think it's because I'm shorter than most and, because of that, it looks as if I am wading in deeper water.

It's got to the point where I'm thinking of asking the people at the gate for a free pass, since I believe that, by standing in the water and waving a stick, I am doing the Park a service by diverting people from harassing the moose.

I've actually got plenty of other ideas to help bolster Park attendance. How about letting me fly fish from the back of a trained moose?

Better still, why not set up a special program to reintroduce wild fly anglers back into the Park?

Then maybe trained biologists could bring in female fly anglers from other diverse genetic populations such as Sweden or Quebec. Hopefully, they would then provide all the right captivity so that the herd could breed in captivity. After that, they could slowly release us into the rivers so that one day, wild fly anglers will once again roam the Park.

I, for one, would put up with a radio-collar for this.

This, after all, seems to be what tourists want to see. Just imagine their excitement after witnessing two old fly anglers sparring for territorial dominance as a harem of disinterested females in tight neoprene waders fishes a nearby pool.

A wolf howl would have nothing on this. Before long, the Park would be entertaining offers from the National Geographic channel, TSN, and the Playboy Network. Then they'd only be looking for magnificent specimens.

And then, maybe, I could fish in peace.

Horsing around

HHEAD PULLED FORWARD level with her shoulders, Sarah raced over the fields, feeling the power of the large animal beneath her. Moonlight spread across the gently rounded hills like a shawl over shoulders. In her mind's eye, she saw herself indistinguishable from the animal she rode, the two of them united in a striding rhythm racing for the sheer joy of it. Her hands disappearing into the horse's mane and her own hair streaming behind, she was almost floating above the hooves pounding into the earth beneath them both. She wanted to go on forever.

And she would have, had it not been for the alarm clock jangling her into the other world, the waking one. For a moment her heart ached with regret as she realized the dream was no longer real, replaced by a morning routine that would see her out the door and at her school desk all too soon. It was with a heavy heart she again broached the subject with her parents at the breakfast table, even though she knew the response she would inevitably receive. No, getting a horse was out of the question. Still, she was determined.

Sarah had wanted a horse for as long as she could remember. She went to the library and brought home books about horses. Sarah learned everything she could about them, including how to draw them. Every picture that flowed from her pencils and paints included a horse of some kind.

Yet she could not have her own. Sarah lived in the city. For a time she believed that if she wished hard enough and made a space in the family garage, somehow she would come home from school one day to find a horse waiting for her, like mushrooms appearing overnight. But like so many beliefs that fade with age and experience, eventually she knew this would not happen. She learned that horses were expensive.

At first with patience that turned to exasperation, her parents explained that the cost of buying a horse, not a cheap undertaking in itself, was only the beginning. The upkeep was tremendously costly, they said. While Sarah understood what they were saying, accepting it was another matter. She continued to believe that if she wanted something badly enough, she would somehow find a way. A new bank account was started.

However the most she was able to buy with her money was hourly rides at a riding stable near her cottage. For five dollars she could join a mixed bag of other would-be equestrians and walk in line down country roads and along meandering paths through the bush. She became very familiar with the two open areas where they were allowed to trot, maybe even gallop for a minute or less. It wasn't her dream but it was better than riding a bicycle any day.

Sarah chose one of these working quarter horses as her favourite and insisted on riding only this one whenever she went to the stable. Putting her imagination to good use, Sarah pretended it was her own horse and brought it carrots and apples to ingratiate herself. She longed for a special relationship, so that the horse would grow to love her as much as she loved it. By the end of every summer, she was convinced she had succeeded and the final ride, just before Labour Day, was always a little tearful.

Then the years tumbled over each other in their haste through time and before she knew it, Sarah found herself middle-aged. Life was pretty good. Her children were grown and gone, along with their father. She managed to pay her bills, visit with friends and even afford to take the occasional trip with them.

It was on such a trip that she saw the horses in the field. It was a rural area where people had mostly retired with mobile homes on one acre parcels of flat, dry land. Horses were the last thing she expected. But there they were, tucked away in a large fenced field that was much more than one acre. When she rounded the bend in the road, they were a distance away, pulling on a bale of hay. They were beautiful.

She called to them as though it was the most natural thing in the world, while her walking companion made nervous sounds of admonishment. One of the horses lifted its head and then, wonder of wonders, ambled toward Sarah who was standing with her hand extended over the top of the wire fence. Sarah's friend's cautions became more insistent but Sarah knew there was nothing to fear. She knew the horse was simply curious and she wished she had a carrot or lump of sugar.

As the velvet nose slid under her grateful hand, Sarah smelled the old familiar scent of dust mixed with horse and was transported to those youthful summers. A blissful feeling of calm connection drowned out the continued chattering of her friend and for several minutes she stood there, savouring the experience. Eventually the horse grew restless and moved back to join the others, leaving Sarah to gaze in admiration at its smoothly retreating form.

When she arrived home after the trip, Sarah did two things immediately. The first was to call a real estate agent and find out how much her house was worth. The second was to begin investigating the cost of acreage in different parts of Canada. She knew she would have to plan carefully because owning a horse was an expensive proposition. But she was determined.

pic of the past

FOR 300 YEARS after the Battle of the Boyne, Protestants celebrated the defeat in 1690 of the Catholic King James II by his son-in-law, King William III, who was commonly known as William of Orange. In the 1920s, Haliburton certainly got in the spirit for the annual Orange Day parade on July 12. Traditionally, someone on a white horse led the standard-bearers and marchers along main street to the field at the town hall. In the background of this photo you see what is now Country Pickin's on the right and the piles of lumber on the shores of Head Lake

letters to the editor

Leave verbal sparring out of council

To the Editor:

I read with interest the article in the May 22 Echo on the local budget debate. My concerns are not with the budget result as both arguments have merit. My concern is with the tone of the debate.

The BIA representatives were berated for their lack of prior input and appearance at earlier meetings which should be a lesson learned but do we need the aggressive rhetoric that was heard from one particular councilor. Grandstanding at Queen's Park and Ottawa is bad enough but at our local level can't we get along with less verbal confrontation between councilors and the county reeve.

Thank you Reeve Murray Fearrey and the good councilors for giving the taxpayer a better tax rate.

A kind surprise

To the Editor:

Last weekend I had come up from Oshawa to visit some friends and family in Haliburton village. Unfortunately, I happened to lose my wallet and was in a panic to find it. I searched for my wallet for two hours but to no avail. Giving up,

I went and cancelled my credit and debit cards and went back to the city.

Then, just outside of Lindsay I received a call from home saying that my chiropractor had called about my wallet. "Great," was my only thought. Then I started to think about who might have found it.

Well her name is Shannon and she is from around Eagle Lake. This incredible woman, whom I don't even know, paid for priority shipping to send my wallet back that day, without being asked. I truly appreciate what she did and the act of selflessness means so much to me. I would just like to thank her for returning my wallet and returning my faith that some people out there are still genuine and honest!

I ask that this printed so that this woman can feel the appreciation that she deserves.

Relay for Life is a job well done!

To the Editor:

I would like to begin by saying congratulations on a job well done. The Relay for Life on Friday night was a huge success. I think it's safe to say that all teams had a fun-filled evening. Congratulations on the funds raised in our first year. Way to go Haliburton County!

Finally I would like to send a huge thank you to Wendy and Mike Iles and their family, long with all other volunteers and committee members, on a great job.

See you next year!

A young walker has a long way to go before he can master Tai Chi the way Maria Trautman has.

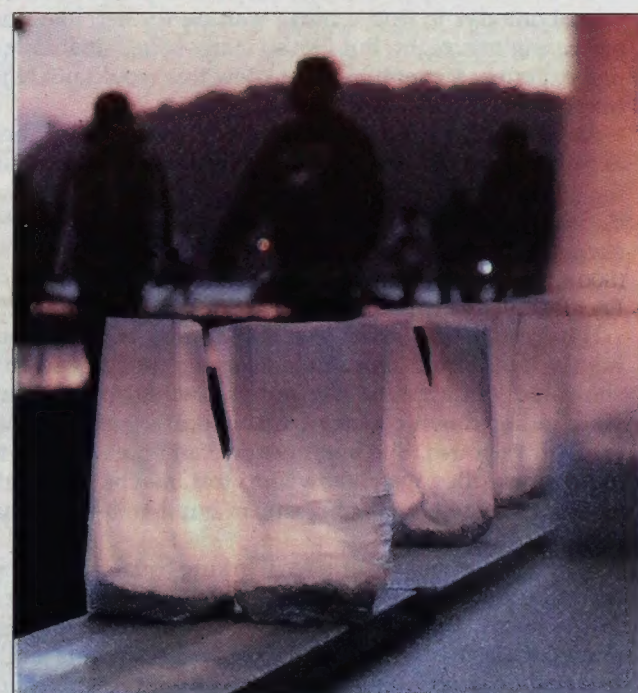

Relay for Life not only brought the entire county together for an evening, it was also a family affair. Gary and Dawn Broham gave their new grandson, Jayden, a taste of community spirit.

Dayle Smith from Cadets Against Cancer models one of the reasons her team won the prize for best-decorated camp: homemade dogtags.

After watching her father Bruce battle cancer, Erin Turner was eager to volunteer for the event.

The dawn sun brought an extra warm glow to the track, above.

It wasn't only Scot Hamilton who was crying when his son Dawson finished the Survivors' Lap. Dawson is currently undergoing treatments for leukemia at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, at left.

Sajo Miscio was one of the team of volunteers who provided manicures, pedicures and massages throughout the night in the Rejuvenation Tent.

It was a proud moment when piper Brian Sachs led the hundreds of participants and volunteers for one last lap at quarter to seven on Saturday morning. Leading the way were members of the organizing committee.

Workshop to give solutions on tearing down barriers to recreation

PAMELA MARSALES

Special to the Echo

There will be an Access to Recreation workshop and community forum at Fleming College this coming Tuesday afternoon to explore the opportunities and challenges to access to recreation for everyone in Haliburton County.

There is a focus on adaptive recreation options for persons with disabilities but all challenges will be addressed. These could be social, physical or economic barriers. Everyone is welcome to attend to learn what resources are available in the community, and suggest what might be needed.

The workshop-forum takes place from 1 to 4 p.m. on Tuesday, June 26, in Classroom 7 at the Haliburton Campus of Fleming College. Pre-registration is requested as space is limited. Not everyone will be able to attend this session, so resource material will remain on display until 6 p.m. so people can drop in after work. If you would like to contribute some promotional material about an accessible recreation option, please get in touch.

Admission is free, or by donation to cover costs. Sponsorship for the guest speaker has been generously provided by the Haliburton Family Medical Centre, a group of healthcare professionals who have always been very community-minded. Their support is appreciated.

Speaker and facilitator Frank Prospero is a dynamo of innovative thinking and action around access to recreation. As executive director of the charitable organization Get Active Now, president of the board of Parks and Recreation Ontario, and co-founder of the Playability initiative, Frank has moved forward the inclusion of persons with disabilities in active recreation alongside their able-bodied peers throughout Ontario. He has received many awards recognizing his contributions, which you can read about in his bio on the registration form. This is available by e-mail, info@getactivenow.ca. You can also call them at (800) 311-9565, for more info or to register by phone. Locally, please call Pamela Marsales, at 457-4767, if you have any resource material to display, or with any other questions.

Since this follows on the heels of "bike week" in Haliburton, it's only fitting that a special feature will present adaptive cycling options. With recumbent, tandems, trikes and handcycles, the joys of cycling can be enjoyed by everybody. Adaptations such as these are available and are currently being developed and improved in a wide range of sports and recreational activities. Frank will give an overview of these, and indicate how to find out more, where there is a specific interest expressed. Recreation is not just physical activity, Frank is quick to point out. An individual in a wheelchair can get active by stimulating their senses out on a trail, experiencing nature, or enjoying social interaction. He has been involved in many partnership initiatives around trails for all. Singing in a choir, playing a weekly card game, joining a sewing circle, playing in a community band are some others great forms of recreation available in Haliburton.

The Get Active Now website is building a database of resource materials and links. There are 85 activities listed with factsheets about making them inclusive, or adapting them to special needs. But sometimes the barriers to participating in recreation lie elsewhere. Being alone is a big challenge. Not knowing what resources there are in the community, not having transportation, not having money for fees or equipment, fear of not fitting in with the group, feeling that there isn't enough time: these are all impediments to accessing recreation.

And yet, recreation is important to being fully human. It keeps us sane and in balance, connects us to others, refreshes and renews our perspective. Hope you can actively participate in Access to Recreation on June 26.

Get Active Now

There is a focus on adaptive recreation for persons with disabilities at the Access to Recreation workshop, but all challenges will be addressed. The workshop takes place on June 26.

Athletic banquet celebrates remarkable year

MATT JAMES

Staff Reporter

Tear ducts were tested at the 29th annual Red Hawks Athletics Banquet, as the speeches delivered by coaches and players were enough to make a grown man cry.

In front of a supportive student body of athletes, Ron Yake, head of the physical education department at HHSS marked 2006-2007 as one of the best in Red Hawk sports history, as five teams captured Kawartha, Ontario and/or Canada wide championships.

It began with the senior football team who didn't start off looking like a championship team. After the first game it was apparent to coaches Derek Little, Tim Davies and Gary Brohman (also the principal) the team needed a lot of work. But the boys worked hard offensively which paid off as the team went on to win the Kawartha and COSSA AA championship. During the award presentation one player presented special teams coach Brohman with a championship ring.

The boys' hockey team endured a few trials and tribulations throughout the season, but their record showed only perfection—the team went undefeated during the regular season posting a record of 13-0-1. With two goalies sharing equal ice time, Mike Lennox and Ian Sachs shocked the competition (and coaches Yake and Brohman) with a combined goals against average of 2.5, unheard of in high school hockey.

Offensively, the team was a force to be reckoned with. In the final period of the COSSA AA championship game, Haliburton was down by a goal when Matt Duchene scored a hat trick and helped on another, taking the boys to victory.

The other kings of the ice came in the form of the boys' curling team, who also placed eighth in OFSSA after winning Kawartha and COSSA AA championships.

The Red Hawks were also champs on the slopes, though coach Christie O'Neill felt that coach Duncan Luciak's fiery and motivational speeches were best left to boys' rugby and football, as the snowboarders weren't having any of it. And it seems that the relaxed atmosphere of snowboarding rubbed off on the OFSSA judges, as it took three weeks for bronze medalist Paul Stevens to find out he'd won.

"Yeah, I was called to the office and they said there was a trophy there with my name on it," said Stevens.

In addition, the junior boys' Nordic skiing team were COSSA AA champs with Daniel Wright leading the way.

While not all teams and 300 student participants can be tops in their sport, plenty of effort was put forth by every team, as coaches' praise reverberated around the Northern Lights Pavilion throughout the evening.

As the Red Hawks season progressed, Haliburton coaches heard the frustrations and fears from other schools over the recent surge by Red Hawk teams, that's how good they'd become.

Other team notables came from coaches Paul Longo and Irv Sternberg who recognized the senior boys' basketball team for their commitment, as every player made it to every 7 a.m. practice. The junior girls volleyball had a bad start but improved with a little help and motivation from their Turkish delight and MVP, Selin Akcicek.

Male and Female Athlete Of The Year

Though the majority of high school sports are team oriented, an athlete is an individual, and this year's male and female athletes of the year have earned their spot on the sports wall of fame; a place they both desired to be.

"The first thing I said when I came to school was, 'where are the basketball tryouts,'" said a teary Sherri Walker, who picked up the female athlete of the year award.

Walker, introduced by her soccer coach, Gord Cameron, was described as the complete athletic and human package as she was clearly a leader both on and off the field. Cameron said Walker was dependable and always displayed humour and support for her teammates. And Walker embraced the fact that she was leader of the team, she understood her role and played it well, in fact, Cameron suggested that Walker often showed the characteristics of a coach. Furthermore, the four-sport athlete (volleyball, soccer, field hockey and ice hockey) wanted to win, but more importantly she wanted to win fair.

The senior badminton coach, Jason Morissette presented the male athlete of the year award to Mike Lennox, who had an outstanding year as a part-time goalie on the boys hockey team, the anchor of the golf team, a midfielder on the soccer team, and of course an individual threat on the badminton team.

Morissette described Lennox as a likeable, fun-loving, infectious, wonderful and loyal human being who likes to talk and he also used the Spider Man-Peter Parker analogy to describe Lennox.

"Peter Parker has nothing on Mike Lennox," said Morissette.

The once-in-a-lifetime coaching experience for Morissette has been wonderful and he said that Lennox's philosophy of sport is a winner; athletic responsibility equals athletic power.

Lennox's golf coach, Paul Longo, said it best, "Mike is money."

In September, the graduating Lennox will head to the University of Toronto where he'll study as a science engineer and no doubt excel in the school's golf and badminton programs. As early as Grade 10, Lennox qualified for OFSSA and this year he ranks in the top 16 in all of Ontario.

Other notable awards

The Impact—you make a difference—Award went to June Smith who takes care of the finances for the school's 26 different teams. If there was ever a problem with uniforms or trophies, Smith would take care of the matter in a flash.

The Intramural Participation Award to honour outstanding participation to the school intramural program went to Kenton Winn.

Hockey phenom Matt Duchene picked up the Kawartha High School Hockey Scoring Leader award with a disgusting set-of statistics. In 13 games played Duchene potted 31 goals and 22 assists for 53 points. That's an average of 4.08 points per game and 2.38 goals per game; his nearest competitor was 25 points behind.

The Red Hawks are losing a very good coach with the departure of Duncan Luciak, who was honoured with an award recognizing his outstanding dedication as an HHSS Red Hawks Coach.

"It's been a great experience and Haliburton's been great to coach; I've really enjoyed it," said Luciak who also commented on the difficulty of leaving.

"Yeah, I really feel like I'm leaving before I got everything done that I wanted to." Luciak has been granted a transfer to I.E. Weldon to make things easier on himself and his family.

And the night would not have been complete without recognizing the coaches. With 26 teams, approximately 52 teachers are required to run the teams and some teachers coach more than one team. Without these teachers acting as coaches the students would be denied the sports they hold so dear. Jake and Sherri Walker, who organized the evening, also represented the students by thanking all the coaches for their dedication to sport.

County rallies behind Relay for Life

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

When the volunteer organizers of Haliburton County's first Relay for Life met with representatives of the Canadian Cancer Society this past January, they were told to set a goal of 20 teams raising $25,000.

A week later, with 15 teams already signed up for the all-night event, the organizing committee had its first inkling that the numbers would be a little higher than that.

But in the darkness of early Saturday morning – a darkness that made it feel like it was still a Friday night – a cheer went up when the 495 participants and 130 volunteers learned that together they had managed to raise an impressive $108,000.

That figure will climb this week as pledges for Relay for Life continue to be registered online.

"I just don't get it," says a dumbfounded Aggie Tose, one of the stalwart local volunteers on the organizing committee. Bancroft's first Relay for Life had raised $46,000 a week earlier, the same night that Lindsay's second event had raised $92,000. Peterborough, a city with almost 10 times the population of Haliburton County, raised $165,000.

Tose couldn't help doing a little happy dance when she learned how this county had managed to pull together in such a meaningful way.

Her mood became more serious when asked why the local event was such a huge success.

"The fact that we had more than 80 survivors taking part was a sign of how much cancer has hit the whole community," she said. One survivor made a special point of taking her turn walking around the track because she will likely die before next year's event. "She's in so much pain and yet she's here," Tose says, her voice full of admiration. "Just think of that the next time you're having a bad day."

Fellow organizers Mike and Wendy Iles were amazed but not surprised by the way the entire county threw itself behind the event. The $20,000 in corporate sponsorships plus endless donations of most of the supplies, equipment and labour needed to pull off such a large event was indicative of how many lives cancer has touched and the deep desire to find ways to beat it.

An amazing contingent of young people took part in the all-night event. But after spending most of the previous day helping out with setting up the event Tom Nichol and Chris Iles couldn't help but get some shuteye as dawn broke over the Fireflies' campsite.

"The lights, generators – free of charge. The bus was donated. At every twist and turn there was more support and sponsorships," says Mike, whose brother Joe Jr. has cancer. "It was amazing."

Wendy says that when the idea of the relay – that teams of 10 would take turns walking around the track for 12 hours throughout the night – was first proposed, most people thought they'd never be able to stay up all night. But as the dawn light pushed away the darkness, there were joggers on the track, walkers companionably doing their circuit, and a buzz of renewed energy throughout the tiny tent city in the middle of the field.

Only a few people, such as her 13-year-old son Chris, who was at work on the field at seven o'clock the previous morning, took a nap. The rest were gamely staying awake during the entire event to help prove that "cancer never sleeps."

"People were charged," Wendy says.

Like many people, the Ileses got much of their inspiration in the early minutes of the event when more than 80 cancer survivors did the first lap around the track. As the crowd cheered them on every step of the way, few were unaffected by the tangible proof that while there can be despair when cancer enters a family's life, there is also much hope.

"It was wonderful to see them so proud," Wendy says of the look on many survivors' faces as they did the victory lap. At that moment, the survivors knew "it was all about them."

With few venues large enough to accommodate such a crowd, organizers stressed that although the event was held in Haliburton, it was a county-wide initiative.

"The county becomes a community in times of need," says Mike Fearrey, one of the Dysart firefighters who supported the event not only by entering two teams, but also by volunteering their time to help set up the event and keep it running smoothly throughout the night.

Anita of the Peterborough and District Canadian Cancer Society told the crowd that it was evident from day one that Haliburton County was about to do something big. "On January 25 I came up here to introduce myself to the organizing committee," she said. "I came out of the meeting and said 'Wow!' I cannot think of too many committees that have the passion and commitment of this one. It's matched only by the commitment of the community."

Although they're going to take a few hours off to catch up on their sleep, organizers are already thinking of next year's event.

"I think it will be bigger next year," Wendy Iles said with an optimism that matched the promise of the dawn on a beautiful June morning.

The deadline for online pledges is June 25. Visit www.relayforlife.ca and follow the links.

Municipalities believe property taxes should fund services to property and we are working with the Province to find solutions.

Survivors' Lap an emotional beginning

John, who for seven years watched her give everything she had to survive the cancer that eventually killed her a little more than a year ago.

Each of these names, plus hundreds of others, were written on the luminaries that lit the way for the 500 people who took turns walking around the high school track from seven o'clock on Friday night to seven o'clock on Saturday morning. Some of the names were accompanied by the words "In Memory Of" while others had "In Honour Of" written above them. But the vast number of names helped explain why a county the size of Haliburton could raise a staggering $108,000 in its first-ever Relay for Life.

"It meant a lot to be here today," says Scot Hamilton, who wasn't the only one who couldn't help but cry as he watched his son Dawson take part in the Survivors' Victory Lap to begin the 12-hour event. "It's emotional."

It's also the constant proof of the county's support of one another that has helped the young family endure the past two years. "It's what keeps us going," he says.

Dawson had beaten leukemia once only to have the cancer return a few months ago. He's currently undergoing treatment at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto but Scot hopes they can come home in the next few weeks.

Jenn Whiteway works at Archie Stouffer Elementary School and has helped spearhead the school's fundraising efforts for the family. She was proud to be able to wear Dawson's heavy strands of bravery beads, each bead representing one of the battles Dawson has had to overcome.

"I'm in awe," she says as she watches Erin Turner add even more designs to Dawson's painted face. "He is the image of bravery."

Turner has her own family warrior. Her father Bruce has had a long and difficult fight against cancer and a wave of feelings washed over her as she watched him take part in the Survivors' Lap.

"It was very, very emotional but I was very proud," she says, her own impish smile a match for Dawson's.

Such emotionally-charged events are a reminder, however, of how important it is to find the ways to treat the disease. Glancing at the 1,000 luminaries that lined the track, Erin said, "Everyone has a tie to a story of someone afflicted with the disease."

Lorie Reynolds was one of Eldon's Angels, a family team that had rallied together to honour the memory of her father Eldon Bull, who died of cancer, as well as several other family members. "We don't want to relive it but [tonight is] a good cry," she says of her family's emotions.

Just before 10 on Friday night, John Currie made his way to the luminary with his wife's name on it. In a few minutes the luminaries, which had been purchased for $5 each, would be lit, their warm glow to act as an inspiration throughout the long night.

In front of the luminary he had placed a photo of Sue when she was in her twenties and not yet facing the ordeal of cancer.

"I'm here for my wife," he said. "Just to be here for her."

Asked what he thinks of cancer, he says, "Cancer sucks. It tore our family apart."

"But it also pulled us together," says Sue's sister Wendy Penhale.

John nods. "Sue was incredibly strong. She fought for seven years and thinking of her makes us stronger."

Throughout the night, if anyone's energy began to weaken there was always something going on to shore up their resolve. Organizers had arranged countless events to put the bounce back in people's steps. Whether it was an aerobics class at 2:30 in the morning, a limbo contest, limbering up with a lesson in belly-dancing, free pizza from Godfather's Pizza in Minden and free ice cream from Kawartha Dairy, or the massages and pedicures in the Rejuvenation Tent, the organizers offered a multitude of ways to, in the words of emcee Steve Heming, "spend the night together."

(By 8:30 on Friday night, all the available appointments with the team of massage therapists and estheticians in the Rejuvenation Tent had been booked. Local chiropractor Katie Hammerschmidt, a member of the organization committee who brought the team together, was not the only one with her hands full.)

The stage was never silent. From the opening of O Canada, sung by Haliburton Idol Lauren Snelgrove, to a moving version of Amazing Grace by Jennifer Strypes of Ariel's Worm after the luminaries were lit, a constant stream of musicians performed and entertained.

Nor was the track itself ever quiet. Each of the 47 teams always had to have at least one member doing laps but most people used it as an occasion to socialize with one another. Around and around they walked, from sun down to sun up.

There were lots of amiable conversations taking place within the tent city in the centre of the field. Although Wendy Gunning hopes that her granddaughter Jayden Gunning won't be as affected by cancer as she has been.

Let's make cancer history

Cancer has taken a toll on my family. Every one of my grandparents, aunts and uncles, my mother and my husband have succumbed to this disease.

Thank you to the steering committee of Relay For Life, the volunteers and especially the walkers for their commitment to this event. I hope and pray that in my granddaughter's lifetime the word cancer will not strike fear in people as it does today.

It is obvious by the fantastic turnout here tonight (nearly 10 percent of our population) that we live in one of the most caring and pro-active communities.

May your walk tonight heal brokenness and bring renewed strength and joy to your lives as we remember those passed and those who survived.

Thanks and let's make cancer history.

Wendy Gunning

County Commercial Printers, Corporate sponsor

open flames were not allowed, people gathered around their lanterns as if they were campfires. Some teams had put a lot of work into their campsites. Two camouflaged Cadet camps took home the honours of the best decorated sites.

When the night sky turned purple and then pink, only a few people could be found dozing in their chairs. Most people stayed awake the entire night, amazed they'd been able to do what they thought might have been impossible only 12 hours earlier.

At quarter to seven, people gathered at the starting line for one last lap, led by piper Brian Sachs and an exhausted but extremely proud organizing committee.

The Rails End Gallery held their 8th annual Trash & Treasure boardwalk sale on June 16. There was plenty to go around with antique lamps, a pogo ball, clothes, furniture and a cool seller on a hot day; fans. Laurie Jones, executive director for the Rails End Gallery said this years T&T was moved closer to the gallery to promote the gallery as well it was closer to the toilets and it was more wheelchair accessible. Above, vendor John Mitchell recommends Drag Lake's, Annie-Marie Borthwick a pair if funky boots that former Times reporter Jessica Young would die for.

Kids get creative at school board arts camp

community news

harcourt

Valerie Smith
448-3640

This past week I had the opportunity to visit the Trillium Lakelands District School Board's Arts Camp. Once again it was a tremendous success. This is the camp's third year and is held at Camp White Pine on Lake Placid in Haliburton.

The camp first started with 124 students and has now grown to almost 200 students. It provides grades 7 to 12 students with an opportunity to gain experiences in visual art, music, music theatre and drama while taking part in such classes as concert band, theatre, painting, digital photography, dance, instrumental music, visual arts. Evening performances and gatherings were held in the Pinetages Theatre and included exciting performances such as the jazz vocal quartets Cadence and many more memorable forms of entertainment by outside performers and the students themselves.

A big note of thanks goes out to all the Trillium Lakelands Arts Camp team of teachers and volunteers who made this camp so special for our students. The children will take home a lifetime of creative and fun memories.

This past Friday evening Mel and I were very fortunate to be part of a large cast of volunteers who assisted with the Haliburton Highlands Cancer Relay For Life. It was held at the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School. It was difficult to hold back the flow of emotions that came over me as I watched the participants circumnavigate the track that was outlined with 1,000 luminaries. It was exciting and it was magical and I look forward to being part of Haliburton's next year's Relay For Life.

A very special thank-you to the organizing committee, all the local sponsors, the entertainers, the multitude of volunteers, the Canadian Cancer Society and all the great participants who made this very special night possible. May cancer soon become an illness of the past.

The Wilberforce Agriculture Fair is coming up the weekend of August 11 and we are looking for scrap pieces of one-inch pine or spruce lumber measuring six inches or longer to build birdhouses and funny faces at the children's craft corner. The response to the craft corner was overwhelming last year with approximately 75 children building either a birdhouse or a funny face. In many cases parents became involved with their child in the birdhouse building process making it an excellent parent/child activity. If you have any wood pieces please call Mel or Valerie at 448-3640 and we will pick it up. The children will thank you.

Don't forget "Batter Up!" Get your teams ready for Harcourt's upcoming 9th Annual Three-Pitch Tournament to be held July 6, 7 and 8. For more information please contact Don Meharrie Jr. 613-339-2364 or e-mail donmeharrie@sympatico.ca

Please note we have an excellent band playing for the tournament dance on July 7. The Kent Boys keep it simple with their unique instruments such as washtub bass, suitcase kick-drum and washtub snare. Their three-part harmonies combined with foot-stomping rhythms and honest lyrics are a must-hear. Plan on attending for an evening of fun, laughter and good entertainment.

If you have any item of interest to share and you wish to submit it for the next feature of the Harcourt and Community News, please e-mail vsmith.rhap-sody@sympatico.ca or call

White Pine sets scene for imagination and fun

Students from HHSS arrived at Camp White Pine on June 12 for five days of activity, fun, honing in on new skills, and having fun with their friends. Camp White Pine has been operating since 1956 and operates on more than 1,600 acres.

At left, along a section of the camp known as 'Arts Alley' many classes were in session during a recent visit from the Echo. Behind that camera is HHSS student Erin Pottier in her digital photography class. Instructor Andres Widjedal had students choose and photograph 10 items from their surroundings such as leaves, sticks or moss.

Right, to some Wakeboarding isn't considered art, but have you ever watched a professional throw a Whirlybird? It doesn't matter if you don't know what it is, it will change your mind. Here Grade 12 HHSS student Ed Cyr becomes airborne.

Dedicated cadets receive awards

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

As the sound of bagpipes danced through the air, seven of the community's finest young army cadets were rewarded for their dedication and discipline last Saturday.

On June 9, the 1129 Haliburton Royal Canadian Army Cadet Corps, Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, held its annual inspection at the Haliburton curling club. Inspecting officers for the day included Robert K. Wigmore, who served with the 'Hasty Ps' regiment from 1940 until 1968 when he was commissioned into the RCAF; and Robert S. Wigmore, who served in Belgium and Holland as a member of the 4th Division 81st transport unit during the Second World War.

Commanding Officer Capt. D. Collings marked the occasion with some brief remarks, thanking the two similarly-named inspecting officers for taking part in the event, and congratulating the entire corps for their growth throughout the past year.

"I'd just like to say how proud I am of the Cadet corps here in Haliburton," he said. "Again you guys have outdone yourselves...I'm very impressed."

Though the ceremony was a celebration for all cadets and their families, several awards were also handed out for individual achievements, including:

Awards for perfect attendance: CWO Hogan, M/Cpl Howard, Pte Clare.
Best Recruit: Pte Cooper.
Best Jr. NCO: M/Cpl Howard.
Best Sr. NCO: Sgt. Russell.
Marksmanship Award: M/Cpl Howard.
Fitness Award: Male - Cpl McDermott, Female - Cdt Bath.
The Morgan English Award for Leadership - CWO Hogan.

Cdt. Bath accepts the female fitness award, presented by curling club president Chester Howse.

Parking sponsorship is $300 a day

that the move was most likely a jab at council, and also expressed concerns that the money could be better spent.

"The donation is actually just going to us. I mean at $300 a day for three days, that's almost $1,000. Just think of all the good causes in Haliburton that could really use that $1,000."

"I don't disagree with you, but this is what they want to do," said Kay.

Meanwhile, councillor Derek Knowles, who has publicly stated he is against the parking fees, opted out of the debate this time around. "I don't even want to get into it," he told council.

In the end, council agreed to allow companies and organizations to fund parking at the suggested daily rate of $300. In addition to that, council stipulated that the sign could be no larger than two feet by two feet and, on the suggestion of Councillor Janis Parker, that the municipality reserves the right to approve all signage, to insure that its message is not "inflammatory against the cost of parking."

Previous council adopted the parking fees in order to help pay for maintenance costs of the paved parking area while providing some relief to taxpayers. Tax dollars had paid all the costs of building the medical centre.

It's estimated that over the next five years the lot will cost the municipality upwards of $350,000 for paving, maintenance, and snow removal costs.

Delicious Ontario strawberries. How we love them. They lend their name to the annual suppers that launch us into our hectic Highlands summers.

The Wilberforce United Church will present their Strawberry Supper on Saturday, June 30 from 5 to 7 p.m. with doors opening at 4:30. Though the dessert gives its name to the meal, it is also the thought of the cold roast beef, turkey, ham and those special salads that draw folks back year after year. Held at the Lloyd Watson Centre the location is convenient and the price is right: only $12, with children 6 to 10 years eating for just $4. Youngsters 5 and under dine free. For those unable to dine at the hall take-out plates will be available.

So many activities and events are available for local residents and visitors as summer rolls in. Among the places that are popular are our museums and historical sites. Beginning June 30 our national historic site, the Red Cross Outpost Historic House, will be open daily from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. for visitors. Some of the early July events include the Canada Day celebrations beginning at 2 p.m. on Sunday July 1, 2007. There will be croquet and afternoon tea on Wednesday, July 4 from 1 p.m.. Then on Thursday, July 5 from 10 a.m. to noon there will be a time of family story writing and sharing. During the second week in July there will be a chance to join in an evening Wilberforce History Walk at 6:30 followed by Twilight Tales at the Outpost at 7:30 p.m.. Tales that are scary, historical, funny or all three are welcome, as long as they are short and entertaining. On Saturday, July 14, many local artists will set up their easels and tables on the lawn by Dark Lake from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.. They will create their art as you watch and will gladly part with some of their creations for a price. That's Art On The Lawn at the Museum. All are welcome at all of these events.

Something new! The Highlands Radio Almanac kicks off its first season this year. According to Amy Brohm, Tourism Marketing Co-ordinator for Haliburton County, this will be a travelling radio show that will reach all areas of the county for a two-hour Saturday morning from 10 a.m. to 12 noon. The show will be before a live audience and sent back to the station to air live. And, get this - they plan to be in Wilberforce for the first show on Saturday, June 30th. The hosts will be Mike Jaycock and Joan Cameron of Canoe FM. More about this next time.

Criticism will be welcomed

Ward 4 Councillor Gary Stoughton agreed that some criticism is inevitable, but expressed his excitement over the idea nonetheless.

"I think it will be the best thing that ever happened," said Stoughton. "We may get a lot of criticism, but that could really help us out."

Burton asked that councillors schedule the meetings in each of their wards, then report back when a date has been set. From there, notices will be made and posted in community centres and municipal buildings.

The meetings will likely not run more than an hour or an hour and a half, said Burton, but their aim will be to gather as much public input as possible. Of course, Burton also said that if a meeting starts to get unruly council may have to pull the plug.

"It's up to us to keep order. If we're not gaining any ground then we'll just have to adjourn and say 'Well, we tried.'"

Rotary Beach in Haliburton already posted to warn against swimming

Summer hasn't officially started yet and the health unit is already warning people not to swim at the Rotary Beach in Haliburton.

Last week's water test results prompted the health unit to post the beach. Posted beaches are considered unsafe for bathing due to high bacteria levels in the water.

All other beaches in the county are safe for swimming.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

TRADE UP NOW !

QUESTION: I live in a small home and would like to trade up to a bigger one in a better location. Should I wait until the value of my present home goes up so I'll have more money to invest?

ANSWER: There has never been a more favorable time to trade up. It's strictly the mathematics of the marketplace.

If your present home will sell for $100,000 (example only), if it goes up 5% you'll have $5,000 extra to buy. However, if the new house sells for $300,000 and it goes up 5% in the same market, it will cost you an extra $15,000. Right off the bat, waiting will cost you an extra $10,000. If you have decided to trade up, waiting will only cost you money.

THERE ARE MANY simple and inexpensive touch-ups that can help sell your home.

- Proof that pit or quarry is established (if necessary)
- Municipal confirmation of zoning

In order to lessen the financial impact on established operations, the ministry has undertaken several initiatives, including:

- waiving the application fee for all Class B licence applications in newly designated areas received prior to the June 30th deadline;
- providing a sample Class "B" site plan to assist operators with the preparation of their own site plans and dedicating MNR staff to assist in the preparation of such site plans when requested;
- extending the site plan submission timeframes over a 36 month period;
- relieving licensees in newly-designated areas from the requirement to submit an annual compliance assessment report for the 2007 calendar year or until a site plan has been approved; and
- reducing the 2-metre contour interval requirement on site plans to a 5-metre interval for those operators who apply for a licence prior to June 30, 2007.

In addition to these measures, MNR staff will consider relieving licensees from the requirement to fence the licenced boundary where it can be determined that a fence is not necessary or practical, and to allow for the removal of topsoil where a suitable alternative for rehabilitation is proposed.

Loving words spoken at funeral

community news

west guilford

Eleanor Cooper
754-2388

News this week begins on a sad note. Dave Walker's mother, Gerd Walker, of Eagle Lake, died on June 11. Gerd was also the mother of Ken of Richmond Hill. At the funeral on June 14, Gerd's granddaughter Crystal spoke so movingly of her grandmother, her loving words echoed by others who spoke as well during the service conducted by the Rev. H. Morgan. After the burial at Maple Lake United Church cemetery, a lunch was provided at the Guilford Centre. Our sympathy goes to all the members of the family in their time of bereavement.

We welcome to the community Rob, Laurie and Sheri Roddell who now own what was David and Michelle Chambers' home.

Our rhubarb patch is still thriving. Feel free to come and pull your own. The amount is not quite limitless, but certainly more than we can ever use over the season.

Congratulations to Andy Burtch and Sara Sisson whose wedding took place at the Centre on June 16. The many guests entered the hall most beautifully decorated with tiny gold lights in ropes of white tulle, and white-covered in silk made a fitting setting for the happy occasion. Dinner and dance followed the wedding and picture taking time. All who know this fine young couple wish them well in their years ahead.

On July 16, eight members of the Haliburton Highlanders Pipes and Drums saluted Charles and June Hendry at the Alexander cottage on Ablett Court, on the occasion of their fiftieth anniversary. The Hendrys are the parents of Carol Alexander. She and Neil and their daughter, Amanda, are all drummers in the band. At about 4 o'clock the band appeared, to the surprise and delight of the couple who had been married in England 50 years ago when Charles was in the army. We add our hearty congratulations to those of the family who were so pleased to be able to surprise the Hendrys with a celebration.

Firefighters clean up

The annual Home Show in Haliburton is not just a chance for local businesses to let everyone know what's new and interesting. The Haliburton Volunteer Fire Department also hosts its annual car wash. By using a little elbow grease, Murray Miscio and Paul Bellefleur helped the department raise almost $900 for the department's equipment fund.

Notice of Annual General Meeting

The Board of Directors of the Kawartha-Haliburton Children's Aid Society is pleased to announce that our Annual General Meeting will be held at:

The Canadian Canoe Museum, 910 Monaghan Road, Peterborough
Ontario at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday June 21, 2007.

The Board of Directors is very pleased to announce that our guest speaker for the Annual General Meeting will be Andree Cazabon. Gemini nominee, Andree Cazabon has delivered a number of workshops on youth-at-risk for educators, front line workers and government agencies and has been a keynote speaker at conferences and a number of professional events. With her previous two films, Letters to a Street Child and No Quick Fix and with her most recent film Wards of the Crown, Andree Cazabon is raising awareness on the child welfare system.

For further information regarding the meeting, please call Laura Ross at 705-743-9751 extension 298.

ILIFFE, Bradford William - It is with great sadness that Brad's family announces his passing Friday, June 8th, 2007 after a courageous fight against cancer. Devoted son of Tom and Annette Iliffe of Cameron, brother of Randy (Joanne) of Whitby, sister Karen Elliott (Bob) of Tara and Laurie Goldiuk (Steve) of Port Hope. Special friend of Tracey McDonald and her children Kaylee and Dylan. He will be fondly remembered by many aunts, uncles, cousins, niece, and nephews. Brad was very active as a hunter and guide and was well-respected by his numerous friends from The Haliburton Highlands and Oshawa. He particularly enjoyed telling tall tales to the children of his friends and will be dearly missed. Thank you to Drs. Fry, Zaleski, and Wilk. Special thanks to Dr. Deveau, the medical teams and nursing staff at Oshawa Lakeridge Health Centre. A celebration of Brad's life with cremation was held on Sunday, June 10th, 2007. - Donations in Brad's memory may be made to The Haliburton Highlands Outdoor Association through Wise Choice Funeral Home, Lindsay.

The family of the late Wilda LaRue would like to express their gratitude to the many people who have shown their love and concern in the loss of a loving Mother, Grandmother, Great Grandmother and Aunt.

Mom was a good Christian woman who prayed for many and touched people with her cards and letters.

Thank you to all the family for the love and support you gave her over the difficult times she experienced.

Special thanks to Pastor Brian Plouffe for the kind words and the love he expressed over many years at the Lakeside Baptist Church.

The nurses and staff at both the Haliburton Hospital and Highland Wood treated mom with wonderful care and concern and deserve many thanks. Her granddaughter Chantal was there for her when she was required to go to Peterborough Hospital and comforted her during those painful times.

The gifts of flowers and food were sincerely appreciated as were the donations to the HHHS Foundation and the Baptist Church.

Finally thank you to Dwaine & Lori Lloyd and staff at the Haliburton Community Funeral Home for their help and concern and to Molly Freeman for arranging the lunch following the Service.

RHONDA C. McGEE
July 14, 1981
Angel Day - June 20, 2004
In memory of our Dearest Granddaughter
Rhonda McGee
who left us 20th June 2004.

We miss you Rhonda every day
It was hard to say goodbye. We loved you so much. I know you are with the angels now and will always be by our side.

Love you always pumpkin
Nana & Poppa

An angel walks among us
We feel you are so near
For we still hear your laughter
And whispers in our ears
To know you are so very close
But yet so far away
Breaks our hearts a little more
With every passing day
Our love for you grows stronger
With the beating of our hearts
In time, we will reunite
And never be apart
It's been three years now, honey
Since you went away
The pain that we feel right now
Is the same as that first day
Remember this, sweet angel
Mommy and daddy are here
And until we are together again
We'll hold your memory dear

We miss you, always
We love you, forever
